HISTORICAL SKETCH

OF THE

REDWOOD LIBRARY INSTITUTION, IN

NEWPORT, RHODE-ISLAND.

THE Redwood Library and Athenæum, owes its origin to a literary and philosophical society, which was established in Newport, in the year 1730. This society* was composed of some of the most respectable men of the town of Newport, at that period one of the most remarkable in the American Colonies, for its wealth, learning and public spirit. Its origin is connected with a splendid name in literature and philosophy.† The celebrated Bishop Berkeley, who resided at this time on Rhode Island, encouraged the formation of this institution, and participated in its discussions. He was the intimate friend of some of its members; and the charm of his conversation, undoubtedly, gave a delightful interest to its meetings. Berkeley resided on Rhode-Island, from January, 1729, to September, 1731; and from frequent intercourse with these vigorous-minded men, derived that knowledge of American character, which prompted his muse to utter the prophetic declaration: "Westward the star of empire takes its way."

At that period, the advantages of the association depended on a system of weekly debates and conversations, upon questions of utility or interest. The formation of a library was, subsequently, considered by them as one of the most powerful means of accomplishing their original purpose, "the promotion of knowledge and virtue." The system of debates was gradually laid aside, and the energies of the society were solely directed to the collection of valuable books. Had the establishment of a library constituted, originally, an object of the society, the valuable books, given by Bishop Berkeley, to Yale College and Harvard University, on his departure from Newport, in 1731, would undoubtedly have been presented by him to this institution, to individual members of which he was strongly attached.

In the accomplishment of this new object, a great impulse was given by Abraham Redwood, Esq., who, in 1747, placed at the disposal of the society £500 sterling, for the purchase of standard books in London. To give permanence and usefulness to his donation, Mr. Redwood enjoined on the society the duty of erecting an edifice, as a depository for such books as might be purchased. In pursuance of their object, a charter of incorporation was obtained in 1747, and the society, in honor of their most liberal benefactor, assumed the name of the Redwood Library Company. For the erection of a library building, five thousand pounds were almost immediately subscribed by different citizens of the town. Henry Collins,* Esq., proved a noble coadjutor of Mr. Redwood, and presented, in June, 1748, to the company, the lot of land then called Bowling Green, on which the present library edifice now stands.

The library building, which is a beautiful specimen of the Doric order, was commenced in 1748, and completed in 1750. The plan was furnished by Joseph Harrison, Esq., Assistant Architect of Blenheim House, England. He also superintended the erection of the edifice, with the committee of the company, consisting of Samuel Wickham, Henry Collins, and John Tillinghast. The master-builders were, Wing Spooner, Samuel Green, Thomas Melvil and Israel Chapman. The principal front is ornamented with a portico of four Doric columns, seventeen feet in height, and projecting nine feet from the walls of the building. The edifice consists of a main building, and two small wings on each side, ranging in a line parallel with the West end of the building. The wings furnish two rooms, of about twelve feet square. The principal library room, occupying the whole of the main building, is thirty-seven feet long, twenty-six feet broad and nineteen feet in height. The edifice is lighted by seven whole windows and three attic windows in the East and West ends. The three whole windows in the East end, are beautifully enriched with tasteful architectural ornament. As a matter of local interest, it may be mentioned, that in their first plan, the proprietors contracted for three attic windows on the North, West and South sides, making in all twelve whole windows and nine attic windows. The East end was to contain only one large Venetian window. The library building, on the outside, is worked in imitation of rustic, and is adorned by the ornaments appropriate to the Doric order. The whole building is supported by a substantial foundation, raised several feet from the ground.

* Henry Collins was a merchant of Newport, distinguished for his wealth, liberality and taste. He employed Smibert, who came out with Dean Berkeley, to take the portraits of Callender, Clap, Hitchcock and Berkeley. Smibert was an excellent artist, and had been previously patronized while at Florence, by the Grand Duke of Tuscany. The portrait of Henry Collins, taken by Smibert, is supposed to be in the possession of some branch of the Flagg family; but the proprietors of the library have not, as yet, been enabled to obtain it.

The first meeting of the Redwood Library Company, after their incorporation, was held in the Council Chamber, in Newport, on the last Wednesday of September, 1747. The following gentlemen were chosen officers of the institution:—Abraham Redwood, Rev. James Honyman, Rev. John Callender, Henry Collins, Edward Scott, Samuel Wickham, John Tillinghast, and Peter Bours, Directors; Joseph Jacob, Treasurer; Edward Scott, Librarian; and Thomas Ward, Secretary.

At a meeting of the company in the Council Chamber, on the 4th of July, 1748, the Directors presented a catalogue of the books which they proposed to purchase in London. The liberal share given in this catalogue, to the ancient classics, evinced a disposition to provide for the scholar the objects of his favourite study. In these times of customary appeal to direct utility, we fear a less liberal expenditure would be allowed for the gratification of classical taste. This catalogue, with Mr. Redwood's bills of exchange, was sent immediately to Mr. John Thomlinson Esq., of London, who appears to have, satisfactorily, executed the commission of the society. He was elected an honorary member, in 1749.

A system of laws for the regulation of the company, drawn up by *Daniel Updike, James Honyman, Jr., Thomas Ward and Matthew Robinson, Esqs., was adopted at a meeting in March, 1750. In 1750, a tax of twelve hundred pounds was assessed on the members of the company, to defray the expense of completing the building.

In 1755, the Rev. Ezra Stiles was admitted an honorary member of the society. His distinction, as a scholar and theologian, connected with his exertions in behalf of the library, justifies some allusion to his character, in an historical sketch of the institution. The Redwood Library, at the time of his settlement in Newport, contained about one thousand five hundred volumes of standard books. The classical and theological departments were the most valuable, and constituted the principal attraction, which determined Dr. Stiles to fix his residence in Newport. He remained in Newport twenty years, and during the greater portion of the time, officiated as Librarian of the company. Having constant access to this valuable collection of books, he drew from it, by assiduous study, his great and various learning. He held an extensive correspondence with European scholars, and the principal object of that correspondence, was to illustrate and perfect those researches and investigations in philosophy, history, antiquities and physical science, to which his mind had been prompted by the perusal of books which he found on our shelves. His zeal for the diffusion of knowledge, led him to solicit for the library valuable works from European authors. Many of these works, obtained through his instrumentality, are still preserved in the library. The copy of Montanus' Hebrew Bible and Dictionary, now belonging to the library, enabled him to perfect his knowledge of the Hebrew language; and a folio copy of Homer, still bears the marks of his profound study, in the form of Greek annotations, in his own hand writing. He was one of the most eloquent advocates of liberty in the Colonies, before the Revolution. The late Dr. Channing says of him:—"To the influence of this distinguished man, in the circle in which I was brought up, I may owe in part the indignation which I feel toward every invasion of human rights. In my earliest years I regarded no human being with equal reverence." His rare learning, eloquence and goodness, uniformly supported by tradition, have received, of late, the attestation of great names. The eloquent eulogy pronounced upon this gifted and extraordinary man, by Chancellor Kent, will preserve for many generations the memory of his attainments, genius and virtue.

In 1770, the proprietors, to evince their grateful sense of Mr. Redwood's exertions for the advancement of the institution, requested him to sit for his picture, the expense of which was to be defrayed from the company's treasury. After repeated solicitations, in 1773, Mr. Redwood gave his consent, agreeably to the wishes of the company. David Cheeseborough, Thomas Vernon and John Bours, Esqs., were appointed a committee to carry the vote of the society into execution. This painting was, probably, executed, but it is doubtful whether it was ever placed in the library. The beautiful portrait, which at the present time adorns the walls of the library room, was copied by Charles B. King, Esq., from an original portrait of Mr. Redwood, and was generously presented by him to the society, in 1817.

No meetings of the Library Company were held, from 1778 to 1785. During the Revolution, the town of Newport was occupied by various armies. The disastrous state of the town compelled many of the best citizens* to leave their homes, and to seek shelter for themselves and families in the more secure retreats of the country. The tumults of war and revolution interrupted the peaceful pursuits of literature, and exerted a chilling influence on the growth of knowledge, and the prosperity of institutions, like that which forms the subject of our sketch. During the war, the library building is said to have been defaced, and many of the books carried off. To the honor of Gen. Prescott, it is said, that on being informed of the exposed state of the library, he stationed a military guard to protect it from further injury and depredation.

At a meeting of the company, held at Mr. Townsend's hotel, on the 14th of October, 1785—it being the first meeting after the conclusion of the War of the Revolution—the following gentlemen were chosen officers of the institution:—Hon. Abraham Redwood, Stephen Ayrault, William Vernon, John Malbone, Jonathan Easton, Nicholas P. Tillinghast, Jacob Richardson and Robert Stevens, Directors; William Channing, Secretary; Christopher Ellery, Librarian; Stephen Ayrault, Treasurer. Several important objects engaged the attention of the society; the principal were, the remission of the annual tax from 1778 to 1785, the repair of the library edifice, the recovery of missing books, and the formation of a catalogue of the library. William Vernon, Henry Marchant and William Channing, Esqs., were appointed to apply to the Hon. General Assembly, at their next session, for a renewal of the Charter of the company, with alterations and amendments.

The society experienced a great misfortune in the death of Mr. Redwood, the founder of the library, March 6, 1788. Beneficent objects seemed to have occupied the mind of Mr. Redwood, as will appear from the following obituary notice, taken from the Newport Herald, March 13th, 1788:—"Last Saturday morning died the Hon. Abraham Redwood, in the 79th year of his age. He was blessed with an ample fortune and a liberal spirit, which prompted him to encourage useful learning and relieve the distresses of mankind. He founded the library in this town. He subscribed largely to a college to be built in this State, on condition that it should be established in the County of Newport. He subscribed five hundred pounds sterling, towards an university proposed to be erected in this town; and he offered the same sum to the Society of Friends, of which he was a member, to endow a school in this place for the instruction of Friends' children. His less public acts of generosity will be gratefully remembered by those on whom they were conferred; and the poor will never forget that Abraham Redwood was their constant friend and benefactor." It is understood that Mr. Redwood removed to Newport from Antigua, where he possessed large and valuable estates.

After his death, the public interest in the prosperity of the institution, seems to have declined. A period of great success in the commerce of the town, was allowed to pass away without bringing new resources for the accomplishment of the objects of the institution. In fact, its very existence, at one time, depended on the resolution and efforts of a few individuals. The late Dr. Channing, in a discourse delivered in Newport, in 1836, alludes to the neglected condition of the library at this period, during which he pursued his studies in this town. He says: "I had no professor or teacher to guide me, but I had two noble places of study. One was yonder beautiful edifice, now so frequented and so useful as a public library; then, so deserted that I spent day after day, and sometimes week after week, amidst its dusty volumes, without interruption from a single visitor."

The public attention was not directed to the importance of the institution, till the year 1810, when the society received an accession of spirit and ability, by the admission of a large number of new proprietors. In March, 1810, James Ogilvie, Esq., visited the town, and delivered several lectures on the advantages of public libraries, which contributed essentially to awaken the public to the claims of the Redwood Library on their generosity and support. He made the society a liberal donation of select and valuable books. From 1810 to the present time, a very respectable interest has been maintained in the institution, and the funds placed at the disposal of the society, have been judiciously managed in accomplishing the plans of its founders.

The valuable services of the late Robert Rogers, Esq., as Librarian and Secretary, from 1810 to 1831, entitle him to the grateful remembrance of all who are interested in the prosperity of the institution.

The exertions of the late Robert Johnston, Esq., in behalf of the institution, demand honorable mention. By his solicitation, some of the most rare and valuable works in the library, were obtained from different individuals in Newport and its neighborhood. In 1834, he made great efforts to enrich the library with the Public Records of England. He succeeded in obtaining eighty-four volumes, seventy-two large folios and twelve octavos, from the Lords Commissioners and Lord Lyndhurst, in consequence of his application to them, through the medium of his friend and agent, Thomas Bland, Esq., of London. These volumes, containing the most valuable materials of English History, were understood to be obtained as a present from the King of Great Britain, on the application of Lord Lyndhurst. As such, they will be perpetually preserved in the Redwood Library.

In 1813, Solomon Southwick, Esq., of Albany, gave to the library one hundred and twenty acres of land, in the State of New York, for the purpose of advancing the institution, and thereby perpetuating the memory of Henry Collins, Esq., one of its principal founders.

In 1834, Abraham Redwood, Esq., of Dorset Place, Marylebone, Eng., being desirous of promoting an institution founded by his honored grandfather, gave to the company the homestead estate, situated in Newport, which he inherited from his father, Jonas Redwood, Esq.

In 1837, Baron Hottinguer, a distinguished banker of Paris, who was connected by marriage with the Redwood family, presented to the company one thousand francs, for the restoration of the building.

In 1840, the Hon. Christopher G. Champlin bequeathed to the company one hundred dollars and some valuable books.

The proprietors are also indebted to the Hon. William C. Gibbs, for his liberality in permitting a free access to a valuable collection of books, at present deposited by him in the library.

The library room is adorned by several paintings and busts. The beautiful bust of John Marshal, was presented in 1839, by Augustus E. Silliman, Esq., of New York. The acknowledgments of the company are due to Charles B. King, Esq., of Washington, for his numerous and valuable donations ; among which are, the portrait of Columbus and that of Abraham Redwood, the founder of the library.

At the October session of the Legislature, in the year 1833, the following Act, entitled an Act to alter the name of the Redwood Library Company, and to amend their Charter, was passed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall be subject to all future acts of the General Assembly, in amendment or repeal thereof, or in any way affecting the same.
